

George Ntaios serves as Associate Professor of Internal Medicine at the University of Thessaly and practices Medicine at the Department of Medicine at the Larissa University Hospital in central Greece. After obtaining his Master and PhD degrees at the Aristotles University of Thessaloniki, he was stroke-trained during a stroke fellowship at the CHUV in Lausanne and during the European Master in Stroke Medicine in Danube University in Austria.

He served as General Secretary of the Hellenic Stroke Organization between 2015-2021, and currently is honored to serve as its President. He was the leading Editor of the Stroke Textbook of the Hellenic Stroke Organization.

He co-authored several Guideline documents and position papers published by various scientific bodies like the European Stroke Organization (ESO), the European Society of Cardiology, the Hellenic Stroke Organization, the Hellenic Society of Cardiology, and the Hellenic Atherosclerosis Society. He served as the co-chair of the ESO Guidelines Committee between 2014-2018 and was the leading author of the Standard Operating Procedure for the development of the Guidelines. He served at the ESO Executive Committee as member-at-large during 2017-2020.

His main research interest focuses on ischemic stroke etiology, prevention and prognosis. His works were published in a broad range of journals including the NEJM, European Heart Journal, Circulation, JACC, JAMA Neurology, Stroke and others.